Professor Phoivos Ziogas succumbs to gunshot wounds

A life marked by courage

Phoivos D. Ziogas was buried on Tuesday.

The Professor and Chair of the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering was the fourth professor to die of wounds suffered in the shooting on the ninth floor of the Henry F. Hall Building on Aug. 24.

Professor Ziogas, 48, died on Sept. 23, nearly one month after the attack, succumbing to complications from the three gunshot wounds. The most damage was caused by a bullet that entered his abdomen and ricocheted, hitting many vital organs.

He remained in intensive care at the Montreal General Hospital, where a bedside vigil by family and friends continued until Wednesday afternoon, when he was pronounced dead at 3:10 p.m.

Professors Matthew Douglass and Michael Hogben died the day of the shooting. Professor A. Jaan Saber died the following day at the Royal Victoria Hospital. Secretary to the Chair of Mechanical Engineering, Elizabeth Horwood, was also injured, but has since been released from hospital.

Rector Patrick Kenniff released a statement immediately following the announcement of Professor Ziogas's death. In it, he said: "Dr. Ziogas has struggled for his life during the past month with the same courage and determination that marked his professional and personal life. The odds, though, were too great.

"As we mourn his death and as we try to come to terms with this new tragedy, let us not lose sight of the importance of maintaining our commitment to carrying on the academic mission of the University with the same zeal and high standards that characterized Dr. Ziogas's career and those of his three deceased colleagues."

In an earlier CTR report, Professor Ziogas's friend and colleague in the Department, Professor Asim Al-Khalili, called him "one of the best human beings I know."

He painted a portrait of a man whose door was always open, who ate lunch with his students in the school cafeteria almost every day.

Professor Ziogas had been associated with the University since 1978, first as a lecturer (1978-79), then as assistant professor (1979-82), associate professor (1982-86), and full professor (since 1986). He was appointed Chair of the Department in 1989. He was also Graduate Programme Director (1988-89) and Undergraduate Co-ordinator (1986-88).

Ziogas earned his BSc, MSc and PhD in Electrical Engineering at the University of

Inquiries

The University is proceeding as quickly as possible to hold inquiries into the shootings on Aug. 24, but legal advisors have cautioned about taking actions which may prejudice proceedings against the gunman.

Gun Control

Concordia's petition to ban all handguns has garnered 10,000 signatures in an internal community campaign. The campaign went national last week with the goal of collecting 500,000 signatures to present to federal Justice Minister Kim Campbell.

Homecoming

After the shootings which took four lives, there were serious doubts about having Homecoming celebrations. But, with so many alumni around the world calling to express their concern and sympathy, this may be a good time for the larger community to reach out to one another.

Shuffle raises $28,000

by Donna Varrica

This year, the Concordia Shuffle had special meaning for the 356 Concordians who walked the 6.5 km from the Loyola Campus to the new J.W. McConnell Building downtown. Sponsors of the Shufflers pledged more than $28,000 to launch the Concordia Memorial Endowment Fund, established to honour the memory of slain Professors Matthew Douglass, Michael Hogben, A. Jaan Saber and Phoivos Ziogas.

Though the Shuffle fell short of its first-year participation rate of 400, it far exceeded its financial commitment, raising close to $10,000 more than it did in 1990. The 1991 Shuffle was hurt by a then-deepening recession and bad weather as 305

Death of Chicago belugas shouldn't automatically rule out belugas for Montréal, says Giraldeau

The death last week of two of the four beluga whales transported recently from Hudson Bay to the Shedd Aquarium in Chicago once again raises the question of animal welfare versus public education. Aquariums like to have small whales, such as orcas and belugas, for research and for public education: once people appreciate the animals up close, they will have a greater desire to protect them in the wild, goes the belief. Given what happened in Chicago, should Montréal go ahead with its plan to have belugas at the Biodôme? Luc-Alain Giraldeau, Professor of Behavioural Ecology, says yes, provided there is not undue suffering to the animals, and there is proof that belugas would affect Montrealers' understanding of nature's diversity and fragility.

"There's no question that keeping a whale in an aquarium does not benefit the individual animal, but it may generate respect from the public, which can help whales as a group. In the case of the beluga, whose Arctic population is not threatened (unlike the Saguenay population), it may be worth the stress of captivity of a few animals if it means the public can be sensitized to the value of this animal.

"The question of suffering isn't as simple as, for instance, the case of rabbits used to test cosmetics; they do suffer and for a superficial end. Maybe belugas do suffer, but to what extent? Some suffering may be acceptable, just as we accept that belugas suffer when Inuit hunt them for food. In our culture we catch belugas, not to eat them but to expose them.

"People in the city forget — or they don't know — about the diversity of nature. Television, pamphlets, books, aren't enough. People must experience nature in its complexity, and a place like the Biodôme makes that possible.

"It's all very well to observe whales in their natural habitat, but many Montréalers don't have the means to make it to a site like the Saguenay. Exposing belugas at the Biodôme is a first step. Those who can't afford to go by boat will take something spectacular away with them from the Biodôme. It can raise their consciousness. Certainly, there's a commercial side to having belugas, but as long as someone leaves the building with a greater appreciation of the diversity of nature, it's worth it."

ATTENTION ARTS AND SCIENCE STUDENTS G.P.A. REGULATIONS

What are the G.P.A. regulations?

The Grade Point Average Regulations (G.P.A.) applies to you if you entered the Faculty of Arts and Science in 1989 or after. Each year, at the end of May, your annual G.P.A. is calculated and appears on your transcript. It is based on the courses you took in the previous summer, fall and winter. In order to remain in good standing at the University, you must obtain a minimum G.P.A. of 2.00 (C). If you receive a G.P.A. of between 1.50 and 1.99 you will automatically be placed on Conditional Standing for the next year. In this case, you must obtain a G.P.A. of 2.00 (C) in the next assessment period. If you do not, you will be in failed standing.

If you receive a G.P.A. of 1.49 or less, you will be in failed standing.

Where can I get more information?

1. See your undergraduate advisor in your department. Every undergraduate student in Arts and Science has a departmental advisor. Make an appointment with the departmental secretary.
2. See the 1992-93 Undergraduate Calendar, "Academic Performance Requirements," page 57.
3. See a professional advisor in the Office of Student Affairs, Arts and Science. Drop by the library (SGW - Room 689) or the Administration Building (Loyola - Room 328). You can also dial 848-2101 or 848-2098.

We will be glad to talk to you.

We want you to have a successful academic year

TESL Centre responds to need

Taking the language test

TESL administrator Marlene Gross and TESL Director Ron Mackay provide crucial service.

by Susan Gray

In its mission statement, Concordia is committed to responding to the needs of Montréal's bilingual and multicultural community.

The TESL (Teaching English as a Second Language) Centre is an excellent example of this commitment.

The Centre provides a crucial service to the University by helping large numbers of francophone and allophone students acquire the requisite language skills for their studies with English as a Second Language (ESL) testing and courses.

In general, the students who must take the ESL tests are non-native speakers of English who have been educated in languages other than English or French. Still, Ronald Mackay, the TESL Centre's Director, said that even students who don't need to take the test — such as Québec francophones — often take it to determine if they need remedial English courses.

Mackay, who is also Director of ESL Credit and Testing, described the programme he oversees with pride. "How much more accessible [to non-anglophone students] can you be than to say to students, 'if you don't have sufficient English proficiency to take full advantage of our instruction, we will tell you and we will provide you with a means of becoming sufficiently proficient?'"

Mackay said Concordia's ESL testing "could be expanded enormously and marketed to a much greater extent than it is." Last March, Lawrence Myles, an ESL instructor and a graduate of Concordia's Master of Applied Linguistics programme, completed an extensive evaluation of TESL and ESL testing activities.

Mackay hopes the University will see the service as a way to increase its francophone and allophone population, an objective it is already pursuing, by implementing the recommendations of the report.

The report was the first to undertake a cost/benefit analysis of ESL Credit and Testing services. One finding was that though every University programme benefits from these services, only the Faculty of Arts and Science pays for them. If services are to expand, said Mackay, the cost should be borne by all the Faculties.

In 1991-92, 1,200 students representing more than 22 different mother tongues were tested, and 1,000 students took ESL Credit courses as part of their academic programmes.

Overall, Mackay said the results of the cost/benefit study were "extremely enlightening." He credits Vice-Rector, Services, Charles Bertrand (at the time, Dean of Arts and Science) with allowing him to apply his remission as director to pay Myles's salary.

Highly experienced teachers

The TESL Centre boasts highly-experienced teachers, most of whom have had extensive foreign experience. These teachers are more sensitive to intercultural nuances than others, Mackay said.

Marlene Gross, an administrative officer and part-time instructor at TESL, said the relationship between students and their ESL teachers is very special. Students who may struggle in the language of instruction find an oasis of understanding and patience at the Centre.

Sometimes, the department's multiculturalism can generate some interesting problems. Gross recalled an incident when a student tried to pay off the Centre to let him pass the test for admission purposes. He admitted that he knew that wasn't how it was done in Canada, but that was how it was done in his country.

Gross said this type of situation arises on a daily basis. For students who need to take the test, it represents the "first big obstacle to a new life." Students tell Gross they will have to leave Canada if they don't receive a passing grade.

"It's very, very hard," Gross said. "You try to keep a distance, but you also have to try to understand."

Environmental concerns move onto corporate agenda

Today's environmental consciousness is forcing the issue of damage to the environment into corporate boardrooms and onto business plans.

ACCOUNTING for the Environment: The Disappearing Resource, a one-day conference in the Alumni Auditorium (H-110) last week, provided an eye-opening look at the environmental laws and policies that are transforming North American business.

In his keynote address, Pierre Marc Johnson of McGill University's Centre for Medicine, Ethics & Law, said that the term 'sustainable development' will have to remain open to interpretation to fit all activities having an impact on the environment.

"If you can't define it precisely, is it a meaningless concept? Johnson asked. "No. One should ask, what does the concept of sustainable development mean for me? What does it imply for my work, and the directions I should be taking?"

Value versus environmental threat

Dan Rubinstein of the Office of the Auditor General suggested valuing resources as a way to calculate the cost of sustainable development, using the logging industry as an example.

"The logging industry has to find a way to put a monetary value on environmental resources, to help them keep track of how well they are sustaining the forests," Rubinstein said. "That is hard to calculate because it is of infinite value, like a human life. Maybe they should look at the value versus the threat of environmental bankruptcy, when the forest is destroyed."

Companies also need to calculate a risk cost involved in the cost of the environmental liability of tomorrow.

"Companies are getting nailed for things that happened 30 years ago," Rubinstein said. "The precedent is well established, and it's likely that in 2010, companies will be judged by the sustainable development standards in place then. The risk cost is calculating the cost of insuring against this."

Industrialized nations will have to recognize the limits to economic growth, said Stuart Hill of the Department of Entomology at the Macdonald Campus of McGill University.

"The environment is not merely a source of wealth and economic resources," Hill said. "It is our home, our habitat ... we have to realize that the environment has absolute requirements, society has relative requirements, and the economy and money have no requirements. They are just tools for implementing our goals."

Hundreds of organizations currently record the ravages of environmental destruction, but Hill warned against an inherent trap in that direction, too.

Monitoring human extinction

"We have to be careful about obsessive monitoring and measuring of the damage, or we might end up merely monitoring our own extinction," Hill said.

Legislators and the courts have responded to environmental damage by widening and strengthening the web of legal liability, lawyer Darlene Pearson said.

"According to recent legislation, everyone involved in the process of waste disposal, including the directors, the people who control the disposal, and those responsible for the disposal, are potentially liable," she said.

As a result, the accountancy profession is looking for ways to fully account for their financial impact in their financial records, according to Blake Tohana of Wainman & Kidd, a chartered accountancy firm.

"The GNP has traditionally been the measure of a nation's economic activity," Tohana said. "Natural resource accounting is one way to redress this situation. It would keep track of resources in terms such as gallons of water and acres of topsoil."

No financial sector has emerged unscathed from the liability legislation. Brian Farlinger, the director of Commercial Affairs for the Canadian Bankers' Association,

A T A GLANCE

by Donna Varrica

This column welcomes the submissions of all Concordia faculty and staff, to promote and encourage individual and group activities in teaching and research, and to recognize work-related achievements.

- Philosophy Professor Ernest Joós has been elected Professor Emeritus by the Assembly of Professors and Student Representatives of Eötvös University College in Budapest. The honour will enable him to offer seminars of his choice. In July, he was invited to present the paper "Section Aesthetics: La violence de la laideur" by the president of the second International Congress on Violence and Coexistence. In June, he evaluated a 50-page article on Jean-Paul Sartre for The Dialogue, the Journal of the Canadian Philosophical Association at the request of the editor of the journal's English section.
- Classics Professor Eileen M. Preston presented a paper "Myth and Metamorphosis" at the interdisciplinary Conference on Myth and Knowledge, held at Memorial University, Sir Wilfred Grenfell College, Corner Brook, Newfoundland.
- Also in the Classics Department, Professor M. Catherine Bolton, gave a paper "The Isolating Effect of Sola in Heroides X" at the Classical Association of Canada conference held in Prince Edward Island in May.
- The Faculty of Arts and Science launched the David McKeen Essay Competition last May with the topic "Does Language Make Us Human?" The competition carried with it a $1,200 prize. Two winners shared the prize this year: Claire Davis, a student at Loneragan College and Mauro Casiraghi from the English Department.
- The Liberal Arts College held its first alumni/ae reunion in August since it was founded in 1978. More than 100 former students and staff from across Canada and from as far as England, France and New Zealand attended the celebration.
- Political Science Professor Klaus Herrmann read a paper in April at the British Political Studies/Society for the Study of Religion/British Sociological Association at St. Mary's College, Strawberry Hill, Twickenham, England. The paper was titled "Politics and Religion in German Judaism Today."
- Art Professor Irene Whittome has won the $25,000 Gershon Iskowitz Prize, one of Canada's top awards for visual arts.
- Sociology and Anthropology Professor Danielle Gauvreau presented a paper in May at the Annual Conference of the Canadian Historical Association (Learned Societies) in Charlottetown, P.E.I. The paper was titled "Les grands espaces saguenayens: un aire de reproduction démographique différenciée avant 1971." Gauvreau and Maria De Koninck of the Université de Laval also published two articles in the June issue of Recherches sociographiques on the theme, "Women and Reproduction." The articles were: "Destins de femmes, destins de meres: image et réalités historiques de la maternité au Québec" by Gauvreau and "Réflexions, bilan et prospective: compte-rendu d'une table ronde sur le theme femmes et reproduction" by De Koninck and Gauvreau.
- Professor John Jackson, also of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology, presented a paper titled The Performance Triangle: Bureaucracy, Creation and Interpretation at a conference in August on the Sociology and Anthropology of Performance at Carleton University. Jackson and Vered Talai have received $6,000 from the Committee for Innovative Teaching Development Grants for a project titled, Theory, Research and Practice in Community Organization. In co-operation with Educational Technology and the Community Development Department of the Montréal YMCA, the objective of the project is to develop teaching materials for Sociology 353 and 354 (community studies) designed to link research with practice in the fields of community studies and community development.
- Jackson also co-wrote an article with English Professor Howard Fink, titled "La paternité du texte: édition du théâtre radiophonique d'Andrew Allan."
- Professor Fran Shaver of the Sociology and Anthropology Department has been awarded a start-up operating grant by the Faculty Research Development Program (FRDP) in the amount of $26,800 for a three-year period. She was also awarded a FRDP equipment grant for $2,500.
- Marianne Gosztanyi Ainley, Principal of the Simone de Beauvoir Institute, presented two papers this summer. The first, titled "Transformation - History of Women in Engineering, Science and Technology in Canada," was given at the 5th Canadian Conference on Women in Engineering, Science and Technology. The second, titled "Laboratory Work in the Field Sciences in Canada: Gender Implications?" was given at the British-North American Joint Meeting "History of Laboratories and Laboratory Science."

to the editor

Quit butting in line: commuter

To the editor:

This letter is an open letter to the woman I met on Thursday, Sept. 23, 1992, in the Shuttle bus line.

You must be quite proud of yourself. Indeed your skills in prowl and stealth are quite envious. Standing first in line of 100 students, engrossed in my newspaper as I waited for the bus, I didn't even hear you sneak up on me and subtly enter the small gap between me and the next person in line.

Imagine my surprise when I happened to look up from my paper and instead of the petite blond I had noticed earlier, I was suddenly aware of your menacing presence. In return you gave me a coy little smile. Behind you, the petite blond woman was looking upon you in disgust.

After a few moments, the arrogance of your action began to annoy me. With a polite manner, I asked you if you had been in line previously. Immediately, you picked up an offensive tone and unleashed a barrage of quickly spoken words: "Yes!" you retorted, "I was here, but I went across the street to see my professor, and he says standing up is against my religion...(!?!?!?!)."

(I could not be sure about the last part because your words were not only quick, but incoherent. I also couldn't quite believe my ears and I invite you to respond to this letter to correct me.)

After staring in disbelief for a while, I uttered a little "Ah...nice trick..." and decided that this was not worth my while. Warily, I continued reading (no such luck): "What do you mean trick!!!" you protested. "What do you care anyway, you're first in line!!!"

"Indeed I am and indeed I don't," I replied, "however the other 99 people in line might."

Your shocking and final retort: "As long as I get a seat, I don't care."

On a totally different note, let me tell you a little about my childhood years in Greece. One of my worst memories was narrowly being trampled to death at age 9 while fighting to get on a bus along with 10 other people at the same time, most of them two feet taller than I was. You see, Greeks lacked and still lack the etiquette of lining up to board a bus. Instead they form a semi-circle around the opening of the door, fighting and clawing to get in even if the bus is empty and there are seats for everyone. Pitiful indeed are the senior citizens who brandish their canes as weapons to ward off the younger and more able-bodied who shove them around. Even more pitiful, a 9 year-old boy who lost his grip on his father's hand and literally got knocked down and trampled on. I had a trauma of crowds and buses for a while afterwards.

Forgive my rambling, but my point is this. When I became a resident of this country I now call my home, the simplicity of forming lines for buses, cashiers, anything, was common. It awed me and I was more than welcome to conform. I cannot understand why you haven't.

Such a simple thing as forming a line stems from one thing: respect. Apparently you seem to lack in this department. Thus, I offer you a word of caution — next time you attempt to butt in a long line, the people around you may not be as weary from a long day as I was. And I hope one of them gives you a piece of their mind. I also wish I could be a "fly on the wall" to watch.

New G.P.A. rules will raise level of tension: professor

To the editor:

The administration has begun to implement a new set of G.P.A. regulations whose purpose I am told is to raise the standards at Concordia University (page 6, The Link, Sept. 17, 1992). A student must obtain a minimum G.P.A. of 2.00 (C) to remain in good standing. If a student receives a G.P.A. of between 1.50 and 1.99 he is placed on conditional standing. A G.P.A. of less than 1.49 will result in failure.

The difficulty of assigning an accurate grade to student performance in many types of courses has forced university administrations to replace numerical grading systems with letter grades. The letter grades appearing on a student transcript form part of the legal contract between student and university. In this legal contractual arrangement, D- is a pass and F is a fail. Up until now, a student could receive a D- in all courses and still receive a degree.

The G.P.A. concept (that of assigning numerical equivalents to letter grades) was introduced by university administrations so that letter grades could be combined to produce a number which is a rough measure of a student's overall performance. The G.P.A. number is useful when determining merit for scholarships and other awards. The G.P.A. should not be used by administrators to make life and death decisions affecting the careers and livelihoods of students.

The G.P.A. regulations serve only to raise the level of tension in the university. Students even now are going around asking professors to raise marks in order to improve their G.P.A.s. The new G.P.A. regulations will be a nightmare to administer and will, like the GST, spawn a whole host of techniques to get around them. What G.P.A. measures is questionable and should not be used to weed out students who are still in a very formative period of their lives.

Excellence, increased productivity and creativity result when good information is made available to as many people as possible. The university should strive relentlessly to improve the quality of information it gives to students and should let the market place decide who should use what information where and when.

Governors want to clear the air about August shootings

Lawyers advise caution in setting date for inquiries

by Ken Whittingham

Concordia is proceeding as quickly as possible to hold full and open inquiries into the events surrounding the shootings of four University professors and one staff member on Aug. 24.

Rector Patrick Kenniff told last Wednesday's Board of Governors meeting that one inquiry will centre on the question of "academic and scientific integrity" at the University.

The other will review University rules, policies, practices and procedures — both as they relate to disruptive and uncivil behaviour on campus, and to the resolution of differences.

The latter inquiry will include a full review of the employment history of Concordia Mechanical Engineering Associate Professor Valery Fabrikant, who has been charged with three counts of first-degree murder in connection with the shootings. A fourth professor, Phoivos Ziogas, died in hospital last Wednesday.

With Concordia University Faculty Association (CUFA) Acting President June Chaikelson looking on, Kenniff said the University is collaborating closely with CUFA in all matters relating to the inquiries.

When questioned about the launch dates of the inquiries, Kenniff said the University's legal advisors have cautioned Concordia about taking any action that could prejudice the criminal or civil proceedings now under way against Valery Fabrikant.

That being said, "Concordia is moving as expeditiously as possible to determine the precise mandate, time frame and likely composition" of the proposed committee or committees of inquiry.

Dispel suspicions

The University leadership, including the Board of Governors, recognizes the need to dispel any remaining suspicions, accusations or allegations surrounding activities in the Faculty of Engineering and Computer Science, Kenniff added.

An internal investigation conducted last spring by Rose Sheinin, the Vice-Rector Academic, determined that such allegations were unfounded. Because of recent events, however, he said that it is essential that the University provide additional assurances — both to the internal and external communities.

"Engineering and Computer Science is one of our strongest faculties," Kenniff said, adding that "the national and international reputations of the Dean and the people who work with him speak for themselves."

"Those besmirched by the tar brush of Valery Fabrikant" want a clearing of the air, he said, and soon.

Responding to comments that the public and the internal community are anxious to see the inquiries under way, Kenniff said the Board's decision to follow the advice of the University's legal counsel should in no way be interpreted as "an attempt to put this issue on the back burner."

He said that inquiries will proceed as soon as the University's lawyers give the green light.

As has been widely reported, Vice-Rector, Services, Charles Bertrand launched an internal review Aug. 25 concerning the security aspects of the shootings. That report will be presented to the community as soon as it is complete, Kenniff said.

The Rector later issued a formal statement summarizing the report he made to the Board concerning the inquiries. That statement was distributed to the media and through general distribution to all Concordia faculty and staff.

Hearing board decisions suspended

The Board of Governors has suspended two Code of Conduct (Non-Academic) hearing board decisions made last June, which ruled that the University and four of its faculty members violated Valery Fabrikant's rights by harassing and intimidating him on two occasions last fall.

Both cases had been under appeal, but the appeal process would have required the presence and active participation of Fabrikant, who is now behind bars at the Parthenais Detention Centre following his arrest on charges of murder and attempted murder in connection with the Aug. 24 shootings of five people at Concordia.

The hearing board decision and the appeal process "should be suspended at least until the conclusion of criminal proceedings" against Fabrikant, Rector Patrick Kenniff said at last Wednesday's Board of Governors meeting, adding that "they (the appeals) could not be dealt with dispassionately at this time."

The Governors agreed. Their decision means that the professors involved and the University administration don't have to pay the fines imposed on them by the hearing board. Also, they are no longer required to write letters of apology to Fabrikant, as was ordered by the board. All matters relating to the June decisions and their appeal are suspended indefinitely.

In response to a question from Governor Robert Pallen, Kenniff and outgoing Board Chairman P. André Gervais said that the Governors's executive committee has been studying how best to deal with incidents of disruptive behaviour on campus.

A draft policy on the subject had been developed during the past year, and University-wide consultations on its contents are likely to begin this fall, Kenniff said.

Anti-handgun campaign collects 10,000 signatures

Petitioning for change

by Michael Orsini

Concordia's petition to ban handguns has garnered more than 10,000 signatures to date — and that's only internally.

The University has expanded the campaign across the country, said Hugh Brodie, Assistant to Rector Patrick Kenniff. The goal of the six-month campaign, which was kicked off Sept. 22, is to collect 500,000 signatures.

Concordia began a letter-writing campaign this week, appealing to hundreds of educational institutions, corporations, and community organizations to persuade federal Justice Minister Kim Campbell that handgun use should be restricted to soldiers and to police.

A letter signed by Kenniff, which includes a copy of the petition, was placed in the latest issue of University Affairs, published by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, which represents 89 degree-granting institutions across the country.

'We must tell our leaders that the risks to society associated with the possession of guns far outweigh any potential benefits deriving from their possession.'

"This tragedy and the increasing number of violent incidents on North American university campuses clearly show that we must tell our leaders that the risks to society associated with the possession of guns far outweigh any potential benefits deriving from their possession," Kenniff wrote.

Brodie said the University has been involved in the campaign for stricter gun control since the Dec. 1989 massacre at École Polytechnique, which left 14 women dead.

"We didn't just get on the bandwagon (as a result of the Aug. 24 shooting)," Brodie said.

The shooting rampage at the University only intensified the University's commitment to the cause, Brodie said.

Apart from signing and distributing the petition, the University is calling on interested parties to lobby their federal and provincial representatives, as well as to write letters and opinion pieces about the subject — to ensure that the profile of the issue remains high.

Brodie said the university's demands are clear: a total ban of handguns.

"This is not a political issue," he said. "It's a matter of personal safety. The government must either say yes or no. They either agree or they don't."

The University is seeking the support of a number of key organizations, including the Canadian Medical Association and the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police.

Concordia is also in the process of creating a small working group made up of faculty, students and staff members.

And how will the University handle the powerful gun lobby?

Brodie said University officials are prepared to debate the issue publicly with gun enthusiasts.

"We consider our position to be a reasonable one," Brodie said. "I don't think we're taking a self-righteous attitude. We're not trying to stop the legitimate pursuits of hunting."

Anyone in the University wishing to sign the petition can do so at the following locations:

- Henry F. Hall Building — Seventh Floor Cafeteria, Lobby
- J.W. McConnell Building — Student Accounts, Library Reference Desk, Library Foyer and Place Concordia.
- Loyola Campus — Hingston Hall, Guadagni Lounge, Campus Centre Cafeteria, Atrium of the Vanier Library/Concert Hall, Library Reference Desk (Vanier Library) and the Lobby of the Administration Building.

Groome Committee report not yet completed

The Ad hoc Committee to Review the Composition, Rules and Procedures for Evaluation and Advisory Search Committees, chaired by incoming Chairman of the Board of Governors, Reginald K. Groome, has not completed its work and will therefore not release its report until later this fall.

The announcement was made at both the Senate meeting of Sept. 18 and the Board of Governors meeting of Sept. 23.

In a statement prepared and read at the Senate meeting by Rose Sheinin, Vice-Rector, Academic, she stressed the importance of Senate's input into all aspects of the report.

At a March meeting of Senate, a motion was adopted requesting that the hearings and deliberations of the ad hoc committee be public and that the final report be submitted to Senate for discussion and action prior to consideration by the full membership of the Board of Governors. It was also agreed that the report must be received in time for consideration at a Senate meeting scheduled between September and April.

The Board of Governors agreed with all the requests, except public deliberations. And, a request made in December 1991 and again in March 1992, to revise the committee's membership to include three Senate representatives, was denied.

Members elected to Senate task force

by Donna Varrica

Among the many questions raised during Senate deliberations on the selection procedures for the Dean of the Faculty of Commerce and Administration was the mandate, structure and functioning of Senate, the University's highest academic body.

A motion put forth and approved by Senate on May 1 called for the creation of a task force on senate reform. The members of that task force were elected at the last meeting of Senate on Sept. 18. They are:

- Dean Robert J. Parker, representing senior administration;
- Professor F.D. Douglas Hamblin, representing the Faculty of Engineering and Computer Science;
- Professor Elizabeth Sacca, representing the Faculty of Fine Arts;
- Professor Juan Segovia, representing the Faculty of Commerce and Administration;
- Professor Katherine Waters, representing the Faculty of Arts and Science;
- Kim Beaudoin, representing undergraduate students; and,
- P.S. Subramanya, representing graduate students.

During the deliberations, it had been suggested that in 1983-84, Senate had declined to participate in the formulation of policies and procedures which now dictate how the University selects and evaluates senior administrators, including the rector, the vice-rectors, the director of libraries and the deans.

Rose Sheinin, Vice-Rector, Academic, told Senate she had done extensive research into the events leading to the formulation and found that through a series of unrealistic deadlines and unilateral decisions taken by the Steering Committee of Senate in 1983-84, Senate was "not allowed to fulfil its responsibilities in the matter of contributing to the establishment of the policies and procedures which determine the selection of the very important cadre of academic and administrative leaders of the University."

She then recommended that all members of Senate and the Board of Governors, and especially the members of the Task Force on Senate Reform, read these documents.

Sheinin also presented 11 reasons why the work of the task force was so important to Senate. They included self-examination, to make known its needs and views in regard to the selection of senior administration, establishing a code of language and behaviour, the leadership and chairship of Senate, the academic aspect of the profile of a rector, and the functional relationship between Senate and the Board of Governors.

Rector begins ceremony on sombre note

Two new scholarships honour students who have died

Ceremony gives out more than 200 awards

by Barbara Black

The annual Undergraduate Scholarships Induction Ceremony began on a sombre note last Wednesday, when Rector Patrick Kenniff announced that Phoivos Ziogas, Chair of the Department of Mechanical Engineering, had died of gunshot wounds only a few hours before.

There were more moments of sadness during the evening. At the brief ceremony, held this year in the Alumni Auditorium (H-110) of the Henry F. Hall Building, new scholarships and awards are traditionally introduced and presented. Two of the scholarships inducted this year honoured the memory of Concordia students who have recently died.

The family of Sean Wall was present to hear Cinema Professor Mario Falsetto, who described the first-year Cinema student as "sweetly generous, genuinely curious and much loved." The first Sean Wall Scholarship was presented to first-year Cinema student Elizabeth Revaarwerk.

Chris Jackson (not to be confused with the associate dean of the same name) was a close friend of Arianne Johnston and Kip Little, two students who died together last spring in a car accident. He dedicated a scholarship in their memories which will be awarded alternately to a full-time or a mature English student. The recipient will be named in February.

Ecosense bursary

For about a decade, Ecosense has conducted an effective battle for recycling and against pollution. Based largely in Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, the non-profit citizens' group has decided to disband and redirect its energies, and has turned over the balance of its bank account to create the Ecosense Concordia University Alumni Association Bursary.

Another new fund has been created from the $20,000 raised since 1989 by the Concordia Affinity Card. The card, issued by the Bank of Montreal, is a credit card with a distinctive Concordia logo. A percentage from every transaction and every renewal of the card goes to the new fund, which will be used on a discretionary basis to help needy students with their educational expenses. Ron Laughlin, a member of the Affinity Card Advisory Committee, introducing the fund, urged Concordians to phone the Alumni Office and acquire a card.

The Ellen Greenwood Ornstein Memorial Bursary was inducted to help a deserving student in any Faculty. Marion Greenwood, the mother of Mrs. Ornstein, was present. So was her daughter, Amy Ornstein, who was, coincidentally, the recipient of another scholarship for achievement in Exercise Science.

More than 200 students were named as scholarship, grant or prize winners.

Petition calls for creation of stairwell

Some feel unsafe in McConnell Building

by Barbara Black

Not everyone is happy with the new J.W. McConnell Building.

A petition is in circulation calling for the creation of a stairway from the ground floor past the library to the fifth and sixth floors.

The library is on the second, third and fourth floors of the new building, and has elevators and two broad, open staircases at either end of the atrium, which run only between those three floors.

The only access (apart from emergency stairs) from the ground floor to the academic offices on the six floors above the library is by elevator. The only stairway from the ground floor stops at the second floor, where everyone passes through a magnetized turnstile.

Yes, it's complicated. And the main reason, says Property Development Manager Michael Di Grappa, is the prevention of thefts from the library.

"We just can't have multiple access to the library," he said. "We've spent a lot of money on a good security system."

Wall of glass

What particularly frustrates the signers of the petition — and so far, there are at least 225 of them, mostly in the fifth-floor English and Education departments — is that there is a staircase between the fourth, fifth and sixth floors. But if you try to descend from the fifth floor, you'll bump your nose on a solid wall of glass.

Sylvia Benedetti, a secretary in the English Department, who organized the petition, has seen many students do just that from her fifth-floor office.

But the stairway, explained Di Grappa, is only there in the event that the library expands beyond its present three floors to include the floors above. "It's cheaper to build it now than to wait and build it when we need it," he said.

Benedetti said there are two reasons for concern: security and convenience.

The shooting of August 24 has made everyone aware of the need to make a fast exit in case of an emergency. Benedetti said that relying entirely on elevators makes her and others feel claustrophobic. "We had a student crying because she couldn't take the elevator," she said. "I suffer from claustrophobia, and I've had to have therapy to deal with it. Last week all the elevators were out for 20 minutes or so for repairs, and that was a spooky feeling."

Di Grappa pointed out that in accordance with building codes and fire prevention norms for the building, there are a total of five emergency staircases, which are equipped with an alarm system.

Once in, you can't exit without pressing a bar. If you press for three seconds, an alarm will go off. That's to discourage casual users. Keep pressing for another 12 seconds, and you can get out. In the event of a general alarm, these locks are released. In the event of a fire, you're safe from smoke in the stairwell.

Benedetti has suggested that one of these fire staircases be turned over to general access, but Di Grappa said using it for general access would result in the loss of one of the building's required emergency staircases.

Unfortunately, the alarm bell goes off fairly frequently, as impatient people try the fire exits. One couple panicked when they thought they couldn't get out at the street level, and had to be retrieved by security guards. Similarly, the down staircase which looks so tempting from the fifth floor has no sign to explain why it's barred.

Long waits

The other complaint concerns long waits at the bank of three elevators. Benedetti pointed out that the fifth floor (Education, English, Mature Students), and the sixth

THE PETITION READS:

In light of the events of August 24, we need to have a stairwell to exit quickly. We do not feel safe. We are tired of waiting for elevators, and then embarking on overcrowded ones.

We have had students trapped in the fire stairwells because they did not know of the 15-second wait. We have had nervous students, staff and faculty in our offices, upset because they could not go down a stairwell.

The situation must change quickly. We, the undersigned, strongly request access to one of the glass stairwells from the ground floor directly to the 6th floor.

Third Shuffle takes in

The route of the third annual Concordia Shuffle was reversed this year, so that finish line celebrations could take place in Place Concordia of the new J.W. McConnell Building. The 6.5 km walk began at the Loyola Campus and wound its way downtown. There were 356 shufflers who raised more than $28,000 in pledges. All the money will be turned over to the Concordia University Memorial Endowment Fund.

$28,000 and counting

Homecoming will bring people together

Ann Vroom, Director of Alumni Affairs, says that in the days following the shock of Aug. 24, thought was given to cancelling this weekend's Homecoming celebrations, but it was finally decided that events should go ahead as planned.

"The overriding feeling in all these discussions was the importance of giving alumni the opportunity to come back to campus to talk and to share their feelings, and through their presence express a positive commitment to the ongoing life of Concordia," Vroom wrote in an internal memo circulated last week. Her office has had calls from alumni around the world, inquiring about the incident and expressing sympathy.

Homecoming '92 weekend includes student, staff and graduate performances at An Evening with the Performing Arts tonight in the D.B. Clarke Theatre at 7:30 p.m. (admission is $15). On Saturday, there are discussions in the J.A. DeSève Cinema from 9:30 a.m. The Homecoming Cup between the Stingers and the Bishop's Gaiters on the Loyola Campus starts at 1 p.m., and is preceded and followed by social events.

Mystery novels, she writes

The week of October 5-9, 1992 will be a tribute to renowned British mystery novelist P.D. James. A quiz based on her works is already being circulated throughout the University. Each noon hour during the week, episodes of the film version of her work, Devices and Desires will play in the Cinema of the J.W. McConnell Building (noon - 1 p.m. Mon to Thurs.; noon - 2 p.m.

Friday). James will be welcomed at a reception in her honour, Wednesday, October 7, from 10 a.m. to 11:30 a.m., at which participants in the quiz and special guests will be invited to meet the novelist. The Concordia University Bookstore will devote a special section to her works. For additional information, call 848-4871.

EAP committee ensures confidentiality

Suggestions to initiate an Employee Assistance Programme came from many sources: staff, faculty, Chairs' Caucus, and the Future of Concordia Conference. As a result, Susan O'Reilly established an EAP Committee nearly two years ago. The committee, which is chaired by Grendon Haines, is comprised of representatives of employee unions and the service areas.

The committee's mandate was to determine which services we could and should offer to all full-time employees to enhance their emotional and physical well-being.

Those services include psychological counselling for a variety of interpersonal concerns; assistance with drug or alcohol abuse problems, domestic problems (between spouses, between employee and children, between employee and aging parent), and crisis intervention.

The EAP Committee met monthly, sometimes weekly, and even twice weekly during the past year to sift through the diverse needs of all the university departments in order to figure out what type of services the university required, as well as how we might best fill these needs, keeping in mind the need for counsellors who can speak languages other than English and French.

Final interview

We requested, received and examined tenders from a number of EAP-providing agencies and eliminated those which could not satisfy our needs. We then had a two-hour interview with each of the five finalists, selected one candidate and re-interviewed that agency, Donancy Ltd. This part of the process caused the most anguish, but also provided the greatest satisfaction.

The Committee had hoped to include other services, such as financial and legal counselling in the EAP; however, budget restraints necessitated either limiting the kinds of services and the employees who would be covered, or limiting the amount of counselling an employee, spouse, or child could receive. It was an unpleasant choice to have to make. The plan that we chose allows full-time employees, their spouse and/or children, up to six sessions per year.

The crux of the EAP is confidentiality, which is mandated by provincial law. To further ensure this confidentiality, the counselling services are available off-campus. Donancy will report statistics of usage to the EAP Committee quarterly; such reporting will include the number of clients availing themselves of the services, and the types of problems, but not the identity of the person using the service. These statistics will assist us in determining which areas should or should not be developed, and how the programme is being received.

At the conclusion of treatment, clients will be given a form to evaluate services received. Return envelopes pre-addressed to the Internal EAP Co-ordinator will be included.

All of this was theory until the shootings of August. We have heard that the EAP, particularly its crisis-intervention and emotional-counselling sectors, has been warmly and gratefully welcomed by most of the university personnel who were able to avail themselves of it, and some have called it "a godsend."

—by Malcolm Foster, EAP member and CUFA representative, and Ann Pearson, EAP Secretary

Shufflers raised about $17,000.

Once again this year, as it has been since the Shuffle's inception three years ago, University staff has topped participation levels at 74 per cent in 1992 and 76 per cent in 1991. Faculty have made up 12 and 16 per cent of the Shufflers in 1991 and 1992 respectively, while students have comprised 12 and 9 per cent of the participants in the two years. There are no statistics for the 1990 Shuffle.

Unaware of event

When asked why student participation was so low, Advancement Officer Robert Eschenasi, one of the Shuffle's organizers, said the most common complaint he received during Shuffle registration from students was that they didn't know the event was taking place.

"So far, the number of students participating in the Shuffle has never exceeded 40, which represents only .115 per cent of the total student population. We had hoped that by enlisting the aid of the student media and student groups, we could get the message across."

The Concordia Shuffle Bursaries and Entrance Scholarships have benefited 24 students so far, with awards ranging from $1,000 to $1,600 each.

This year's sponsors included Pepsi-Cola Canada Ltd., the Concordia Bookstore, Physical Resources, Marriott Food Services, Printing Services, Athletics and Recreation, Travelways Inc. and the Marketing Communications Department.

A word from the organizers: Please honour your pledges as soon as possible. Pledge money may be returned to the Advancement Office (Bishop Court, Room 319, on the Sir George Williams Campus) or the Office of Advocacy and Support Services (Administration Building, Room 121/3, on the Loyola Campus). Congratulations to Governor Humberto Santos, General Chair of the Annual Giving programme, who raised $2,800, and Dina Tavares, the staff member who raised the most money again this year with $2,200 in pledges.

25-24 come-from-behind victory

McGill victim of last-minute sting

The Concordia Stingers captured their third consecutive Shrine Bowl with a dramatic 25-24 come-from-behind victory over the McGill Redmen Sept. 19.

Before an enthusiastic crowd of over 6,000 and a nationally-televised audience, the Stingers jumped to a quick 9-0 lead compliments of their specialty teams. However, the lead was shortlived as the Redmen battled back to take a 21-12 halftime lead.

McGill added a third-period field goal to increase their lead to 24-12 and appeared to have the game in hand with less than three minutes remaining to play. However, a McGill fumble gave Concordia life and quarterback Andy Peterkin marched the team down the field quickly, scoring on a one-yard plunge to cut McGill's lead to five, 24-19, with one minute and 40 seconds left in the game.

A second McGill fumble two plays later provided the Stingers with one final opportunity. Again, Peterkin provided the spark needed as he hit André Bolduc with a five-yard pass and an unlikely win over their cross-town rivals.

said that banks now carefully screen loan applications for environmental liability risk.

"Some companies are simply denied credit now, because the lender might end up sharing liability," Farlinger said. "Since Canada's legislation is tougher than in the U.S., it's possible that Canadian manufacturers will find themselves at a credit disadvantage versus their American competitors."

In his closing address, Grant W. Russel of the University of Waterloo's School of Accountancy, emphasized that the days of corporate complacency about the environment have clearly ended.

Underlying the disgruntled users' complaint is the assumption that we should all be able to go from A to B under our own steam. English Professor Eyvind Ronquist, waiting for an elevator, noted wistfully that his doctor has told him to take the stairs wherever possible.

Benedetti doesn't see why the building can't accommodate security and alternative access to the elevators.

"There isn't one person I've spoken to who doesn't think it's stupid," she said. "Even in Place Ville-Marie you can go all the way from the 40th floor down to the street by the stairs."

"The world is changing so rapidly that we can't have companies which work by the rulebooks," Russel said. "The books are five years out of date, and usually encourage people to do nothing, to stand around when disaster happens. That's not what we want."

"The things we value, we attempt to measure. Accounting has been the measuring stick of business. But today I can't look at a company and say 'they've got a rating of 2 on the environment.' We need to be able to do that."

The conference was organized by the Concordia Accounting Society, with the support of numerous accounting organizations.

GRADUATE NEWS

Graduate Student Get-Togethers - School of Graduate Studies

The academic year 1992-93 is the inaugural year for the School of Graduate Studies. It will prove to be exciting and will provide us with the opportunity to initiate projects, such as promoting a lecture series by visiting speakers and other similar ventures, to forge stronger links between faculty and students and to stimulate scholarly debate within the community. In addition, Dean Martin Kusy would like to meet with graduate students so we have arranged "get-togethers" for this purpose. There will be two such sessions each semester at our Graduate Administrative offices, 2145 MacKay Street. They will be held from 18:00 - 20:00 on the following dates; First Semester: Tuesday, October 6, 1992 and Thursday, November 12, 1992. Second Semester: Wednesday, February 3, 1993 and Monday, March 8, 1993. Because our space is limited, I ask that you please reserve one of the following dates by contacting Ms. Kali Sakell at 848-3803 if you are interested in attending. We look forward to seeing you.

General Graduate Fellowship Information Sessions

If you are currently registered in the 1st year of your undergraduate degree and planning to pursue Graduate Studies next year, or if you are presently enrolled in a graduate programme and are looking for sources of funding to pursue your graduate studies we urge you to attend one of these sessions.
